Dr. Thomas J. Allardyce brings a wealth of knowledge and expertise to orthopaedic care, holding a B.S.E.E. from Wilkes College and an M.D. from Jefferson Medical College. His rigorous training includes a General Surgical Internship at Lankenau Hospital and an Orthopaedic Residency at Thomas Jefferson University Hospital, where he honed his skills in complex surgical techniques. Board certified by the American Board of Orthopaedic Surgery, Dr. Allardyce has been recognized for his commitment to excellence in the field, receiving the Engel Award for Outstanding Intern in General Surgery. His dedication to education extends beyond his clinical practice; he has presented numerous research papers at prestigious medical conferences and has published important studies on topics such as tendon selection and modular shoulder replacement. Dr. Allardyce focuses on innovative treatment solutions for his patients. His contributions to orthopaedic literature further establish him as a thought leader in his field. With a passion for improving patient outcomes, Dr. Allardyce continues to advance the standards of orthopaedic care through both practice and research.
