

Wayne Memorial Re-Opens Diagnostic Services, Safety a Priority
Patients in Need Encouraged to Schedule Tests

Wayne Memorial Hospital is phasing in services to help provide essential care for non-COVID patients following the guidelines of the federal government announced on April 16th. The first phase, the re-opening of diagnostic services, such as CT scan and MRI, will begin Monday, April 27th. These services had been limited to all but emergency or urgent cases since mid-March. All of the hospital's security measures, such as restricted visitation and access, temperature checks and screenings will remain in place.

“Caring for patients is at the heart of these actions,” said CEO David Hoff, “This is what our doctors and other healthcare providers asked us to do.”

“We are concerned about poor health outcomes in patients not following up on their chronic health conditions,” said James Cruse, MD, director of Wayne Memorial Community Health Centers and a Family Medicine physician. “While COVID-19 is the topic right now, we still need to take care of diabetes, high cholesterol, heart disease, hypertension and other chronic conditions. We are still seeing serious complications from these. Follow-ups of testing abnormalities, evaluations of acute problems with lab and imaging studies, cannot wait.”
